Flipping Houses and Wholesaling Properties Work To Work To Invest 2017-05-21 Flipping is a word that is mainly used in the United States to illustrate the practice of buying an asset that generates revenue and swiftly reselling it for profit. Although any asset can be flipped, the expression is more frequently used for real estate and initial public offerings (IPOs). Flipping in real estate is used to describe real estate rehabbing and redevelopment of residential houses. Although flipping is a legal business, some people engage in flipping in a nasty and deceitful manner. Thus, flipping is often used to describe the real estate business schemes that involve market manipulation for profit makes and sometimes to disparage practices which are frequently seen as illegal and unethical. Real estate flippers make their profits either by procuring the properties at lower costs and selling at higher prices in a fast moving market or by purchasing a property that needs rehabbing and renovating it before reselling it.
